Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks

Art Unit: 1714

The reply brief filed on June 9, 1999 has been entered and considered. The application has been forwarded to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences for decision on the appeal with following comments.

Appellants asserts that the instant powder coating and the paint art are completely different arts. Even though there are many different features, such as the method of application, in the instant powder coating and the paint art, however, the basic nature or principle of obtaining the final (or desired) color is the same which is to use a mixture of different colors unless one powder coating or pigment having said final (or desired) color is available. This is the common practice in any art dealing with colors. Also, this is not new points contrary to appellents' assertion since the examiner has stated that the use of different colors in order to obtain other color is a prima facie in the Advisory Action mailed on December 8, 1998. The recitation of Sears and Home Depot is the examples for layman.
